A Horse Thief that Proved to Be a Handsome Young Girl.

In the first days of Leadville, wagons formed the only means of transportation for the immense quantity of merchandise needed there, and for the shipment of the large output of ore and bullion. As a consequence, horses and mules were used in large numbers. Trains of freight wagons lined the roads leading to the great carbonate camp, and it frequently became necessary to turn the stock out after a hard day's journey to graze on the adjoining hillsides. Lea wille offered a good market for work stock of all kinds, as animals brought from the East fraquently succumbed to the climatic effect of a high altitude and heavy work. Many a freighter reached the top of a hard pull only to see his best work-mule lie down and die in the harness. Such inducements and easy sale brought professional horse-thieves in abundance. The immunity from punishment that they seemed to enjoy and high prices paid for their plunder stimula ed them to constant activity, and made them bold in their profession. Sagnache County, Colorado. was a favorite sect on for the operations of this fraternity, these gentlemen making their trips with almost the regularity of stage coaches.

After an unusually bold raid, a party was organized, determined to follow the trail and overtake the thieves, and if the depredators were caught to save all county expenses in the way of Sheriff fees and trials. The party started early in the morning, and as the trail was large and hot they were able to follow it almost at a gallop. Following along the west side of the San Luis Valley and then through a defile of the Sangre de Christo Mountains, the course of the pursuers and pursued emerged into the Arkansas Valley, close to where the South Arkansas flows into the main s re m. Here it was evident that the two parties could only be a short distance apart. The robbers had taken more stock than they could easily handle, and did not seem to be aware that they were being followed. Two of the stockmen from the ranches on the route joined the vigilantes and furnished fresh borses. About noon on the following day the thieves, with the stolen stock, were discovered camped at the north of Cottonwood Creek. They were but two. One appeared to be a young boy not over 16; the other was a fine-looking young man of perhaps 20 or 22 years of age. On being called on to surrender white rats is the boy pulled a six-shooter and fired on of this city. the vigilantes. At the same time he and his companion jumped down behind the benk of the river, from which place it was found impossible to dislodge them without the loss of at least three or four

After a hurried council of wer, it was decided for two men to go down the river. cross over, and come up on the other side to a point where the fugiti es could be easily covered, and the balance to prevent their escape from the position they were in. This was done, and when the thieves were again summoned to surreuder, they simply turned and commenced uring at their two pursuers on the opposite side of the river. The fire was returned, and resulted in the boy dropping dead with a broken neck, and his companion falling with a bullet through the lungs. When the vigilantes went to where they lay the elder was still alive, and the boy was, of course, de d, and proved to be a lovely young girl, wi h delicate and refined features. The one who could still talk refused to tell who they were or from whence they came, only that their people were respectable, and that he desired them to remove his boots, as he did not wish to die with his boots on. He was evidently a man of good education, but positively refused to give any information. In a few hours he also w s dead, and the two were buried beneath the cottonwood: near the river Their identity was never discovered, Helena Journal.

Railroad Human Nature.

Now and then one finds a person who understands railroad human nature, as exhibited by the gatemen in the depots. Their orders are to pass no one in without a ticket, and it is the easiest thing in the world for them to wave back old age. youth, beauty, and anybody else who wants to pass in to meet a friend expected on that train. One of the surliest officials I eversaw has a gate in the L, and N. Depot in Cincinnati, and I have seen him turn stiffly away from desperate men. weeping women and howling children. To every protestation he had but one

"Can't pass 'thout a ticket."

The other day while I was watching him a little blue-eyed women came gliding into the throng waiting at the gates. Of the two tenders she selected this one to operate on, although any one could have seen that the other had the biggest heart. After several people had been turned away she slid forward in a gracefal way and inquired: "Beg perdon, sir, but am I speaking to the President of the road?" 'N-o, ma'am," he stammered, thrown on his beam ends by the query. "Ah! you look so much like him. Are you the Superintendent?"

No, ma'am-not exactly."

"Then you must be the Manager?"
"Hardly, ma'am."

"Dear me! but how could the people be so mistaken, "she went on, "Half a dozen of them said you were one of the high officials, and I am so disappointed to find the General Manager's powers when be is not here?

"What is it, ma'am?" "My sister will be in on the 6:30, and I so want to go inside the gates and help don't he?" help her with the children. As you must have the authority of the Manager in his absence, I make bold to

"Certainly, ma'am; walk right in," he interrupted.

You ere so kind." Don't mention it.

But all leading railreal men are ever courteous," she said as a parting bit of tany, and then she made a bee-line down the depot.

We urned to look at the gateman, and the change was surprising. He had braced up until his height was increased by four inches, his chest thrown out, and was standing as stiff as a crowbar while a man pounded him on the back and offered to took the stoffing out of him if he would come on the peach. The litthe woman of all had found his weak spot,

The proprietor could see nothing wrong in granting such a request, and the young lady selected a number of pieces of jewelry which suited her taste. They were marked and the clerks notified. This was rejected at the crockery, music and book stores. From all that can be learned the scheme worked well, and on her wedding night the happy bride had but few presents with which she was not pleased. - Macon Telegraph.

The Life of a Stoker.

The s'okers on one of the great orean steemers work four hours at a stretch in a temperature ranging from 120 to 160 degrees. The quarters are close, and they must take are that while feeding one furnace their arms are not burned on the one behind them. Vent I tion is furnished through a shaft reaching down to the middle of their quarter. Each stoker tends four furnaces, spending perhaps two or three minutes at each; then dashes to the sis pipe to take his turn at cooling off, and waits for another call to his furnaces. When the watch is over the men go perspiring though long, sold passages to the forecastle, where they turn in for eight hours. One man, twenty-eight years old, who was interviewed by a reporter, had been employed at the furnaces since he was fourteen years old. He weighed 180 pounds, and was ruddy and seemingly happy. He confessed that the work was terribly hard, but it came hardest on those who did not follow it regularly.

"But if we get plenty to cat," he said, and take care of ourselves, we are right. Here's a mate of mine, nearly seventy years old, who has been a stoker all his life and can do as good work as I can. Stokers never have the consumption, and rarely catch cold. Their greg has been knocked off on the English and American lines because the men got drunk too often and the grog did them much harm. When I used to take my grog I'd work just like a lion-while the effect lasted. I'd throw in my coal just like a giant, and not mind the heat a bit. But when it worked off, as it did in a very few minutes, I was that weak that a child could upset me. Take a man dead drunk before the fires and the heat would sober him off or give him a stroke of apoplexy."- Popular Science Monthly.

She Tumbled During the Last Act.

It was at one of the Salvini matinees and the play was "Othello," Two g ris to whom not only the acting but the play itself was evidently a novelty sat in the balcony. They gigg ed more or less during the early portions of the play, but gradually they fell under the spell of genius and their laughter gave place to the closest attention. As the last act proceeded it was noticed by one who had observed them curiously during the afternoon that they were full of excitement and sympathy, and sighs took the place of the giggle of the opening scenes. It is a common belief but still an error that French is the language of Frence. It is the language of books and newspapers, but the great mass of the people cling to their old Patois. In parts of Brittany the priests still preach to their congregations in a Celtic dialect. The Iberian tongue is still the idiom of the Basques. The inhabitants of Alsace-Lorraine speak a dialect resembling that of the Swabian minnesingers. In French Flanders there are local newspapers an t popular books printed in Walloon and Picard. Geography of Africa.

During Mr. Stanley's recently closed expedition he penetrated to the shores of the Albert Nvanza for the third time. This fell dead as soon as the people's attention visit has enabled him to determine that there is a southern Albert lake, which he has named Lake Albert Edward.

At first this water was supposed to be a part of the northern lake, but that idea had to be given up. The southern lake is found to be nine hundred feet higher than the northern, and is connected with this by the River Sempliki.

Mr. Stanley skirted the snowy mountain range referred to in his former letters, and found that it sends down fifty streams to feed the Sempliki.
